ARTICLE 3

The following categories may be used for reparations:

- a. Capital of Japanese enterprises in China, and industries equipped with same capital.
- b. Machines, material, and relative equipment brought from Japan to factories, mines, railways, electrical communications, and such enterprises in China.
- c. Japanese-owned industries and buildings in China.

ARTICLE 4

The original capital and debentures of Japanese organizations doing business in China and their expenditures in China shall be investigated and reported in an accurate statement of account.

ARTICLE 5

In confiscating Japanese properties, those which can be used as reparations, and those which cannot, shall be listed on separate sheets.

ARTICLE 6

In confiscating Japanese properties, they should be carefully examined, and those which ought to be discounted for obsolescence or depreciation shall have said amounts deducted and the net value recorded.

ARTICLE 7

In confiscating Japanese properties, the unit used shall be the national currency. If the original cost is stated in Japanese or puppet money, it shall be converted into national currency at the local rate of exchange and so recorded.

ARTICLE 8

In each Nationalist-recovered region the office for handling Japanese and puppet property, and other agencies concerned, shall make separate tabulations of the various types of Japanese property confiscated and send them to the Reparations Committee for compilation and transmission to the Executive Yuan for action.

ARTICLE 9

In confiscating various types of Japanese property, after the Executive Yuan has decided that any piece of property shall be sold, leased, or operated, each receiving agency shall handle it under one of the following categories:
